

THE FROGS IN THE CREAM

Once upon a _____ (time), two little _____ (frogs) fell into a vat of cream. They knew they were going to drown: it was _____ (impossible) to swim or float for very long. For a while, the two frogs kicked the cream, but it was useless; they only managed to sink down deeper.

Then one of the frogs _____ (said): "I can't take anymore. It's impossible to get out of _____ (here). I can't _____ (swim) in this stuff. And, as I'm going to _____ (die), I don't see the sense in fighting so much." Having said this, he stopped kicking and _____ (drowned), quickly swallowed by the cream.

The other frog, who was more persistent or perhaps more _____ (stubborn), said: "_____ (It's impossible!) I can't do _____ (anything) to get out of this. However, although death is near, I'd rather fight until my last _____ (breath)." He carried on _____ (kicking) and splashing for _____ (hours and hours), but not moving one centimeter from where he had started. Then, _____ (suddenly), after such a lot of kicking, beating and stirring, the cream turned into _____ (butter).

Surprised, he hopped to the edge of the vat, _____ (jumped out), and _____ (went home) croaking _____ (happily).

